There Is Still A Golden Future, Little Girl.

Lyric by ARTHUR E. BUCKNAM.

Music by
JACOB HENRY ELLIS.

Andante moderato con espress.

Piano.

Some how the old world, lit-tle girl, has treat-ed you un-kind, It stole your old sweet child-hood dreams a-
Don't you re-call the hap-py days be-fore you went a-way, The bright blueskies and ten-der ro-ses

A-way, A-down a strange new path you went so in-no-cent and blind, A-too, My heart, dear, held a mess-age that my fond lips dare not say, I down the path that led you far a-stray; I know the sor-row in your heart, the loved you then al-though you nev-er knew; That's why I long to take you back to bit-ter-ness and pain, I know the mean-ing of each blind-ing tear, To where the ro-ses grow, Where life can still be ver-y sweet you'll find, I ease your heart's deep yearning for the old sweet life a-gain, In deep-est truth I want to tell you dear, long to help you seek, dear, in the land of long a-go, The won-drous hap-pi-ness you left be-hind.

Chorus.

There is still a gold-en fu-ture lit-tle girl, Al-though your life is sad-dened with regret, There are old time friends you knew who are still so fond of you, So hap-py to for-give dear and for-get; All the bur-den and the blame,

All the sor-row and the shame That you learned when you were lost in life's mad whirl, Will-soon be past and gone in to-mor-row's glad new dawn, There is still a gold-en fu-ture lit-tle girl.
